Unit 1: Essay Writing: Introduction, Body and Conclusion

Learning Objectives

• Students will identify the three parts of an essay and state the job of each part.

• Students will write a clear thesis statement for a given essay topic.

• Students will organise supporting points into body paragraphs in a logical order.

Key Concepts

• An essay has three parts: an introduction that presents the topic, a body that develops the argument, and a conclusion that sums it up.

• The introduction ends with a thesis statement — one sentence that tells the reader what the essay will prove or explain.

• Each body paragraph covers one main idea, starts with a topic sentence, and supports it with reasons or examples.

• The conclusion restates the thesis in fresh words and leaves the reader with a final thought, without adding new arguments.

Teaching Methodology (Step by Step)

1. Show a short jumbled essay and ask students to sort its paragraphs into introduction, body and conclusion.

2. Write a weak thesis and a strong thesis on the board and compare them together.

3. Model one body paragraph: topic sentence, reason, example, closing line.

4. Students plan an essay on 'Why reading matters' with a thesis and three points.

5. Students write one body paragraph from their plan and swap it with a partner for checking.

Classroom Activities

• Sort the essay: groups arrange mixed paragraphs into the correct essay order.

• Thesis clinic: pairs improve three weak thesis statements.

• Paragraph builder: students expand a single topic sentence into a full paragraph.

Assessment Questions

1. Name the three parts of an essay and state the job of each in one line.

2. Write a thesis statement for the topic 'Mobile phones in schools'.

3. Write one body paragraph with a topic sentence and one supporting example.

Homework

• Write a full essay plan on 'Hard work beats luck', with a thesis and three body points.

• Find one essay in your textbook and label its introduction, body and conclusion.
