Unit 1: Democracy: How Citizens Take Part

Learning Objectives

• Students will explain democracy as government by the people through free and fair elections.

• Students will describe four ways citizens take part beyond voting, such as debate, petition and lawful protest.

• Students will discuss why tolerance of different opinions keeps a democracy healthy.

Key Concepts

• Democracy means that citizens choose their rulers in regular, free and fair elections and can remove them at the next election.

• Citizenship is not only voting: it includes staying informed, obeying the law, paying taxes honestly and respecting the rights of others.

• Public debate, a free press, petitions and peaceful protest let citizens raise problems and hold rulers accountable.

• Democratic life requires tolerance: majority rule must respect minority rights, and losers accept results while winners respect dissent.

• Democracy is weakened when votes are bought, information is false, or people stop taking part in public life.

Teaching Methodology (Step by Step)

1. Ask students what changes in a class if the class monitor is chosen by vote instead of appointed, and discuss the difference.

2. Define democracy and list its basic features: elections, equal votes, free speech and rule of law.

3. Present four forms of participation beyond voting and give one real-life example of each.

4. Students debate in small groups whether voting alone is enough for a democracy to work well.

5. Students summarise one responsibility they will practise as citizens in their own community.

Classroom Activities

• Mock election: the class votes on a real class decision, counts votes openly and announces the result.

• Petition writing: groups draft a short respectful petition asking the school to solve a genuine problem.

• Opinion circle: students practise disagreeing politely on a local issue and restating the other side fairly.

Assessment Questions

1. Define democracy in two sentences.

2. Name three ways a citizen can take part in public life without holding office.

3. Why must a democratic majority still respect the rights of a minority?

Homework

• List two problems in your neighbourhood and one lawful, peaceful way citizens could raise each one.

• Explain in four lines why an informed voter is important for democracy.
